History of the SS Misr

Originally built in 1918 for the British Royal Navy, the SS Misr began its life as a propeller steam vessel serving during World War I. Its name, “Misr”—Arabic for Egypt—was chosen in tribute to the country’s importance within the British Empire at the time.

After the war, the vessel was decommissioned until the 1930s, when it was acquired by King Farouk. He commissioned a complete transformation of the ship, converting it into his private royal yacht. This renovation turned the Misr into a lavish floating palace, blending refined European elegance with traditional Egyptian design accents.

Following the 1952 Revolution, the yacht was retired once again and remained untouched for decades.

In the early 2000s, the SS Misr was meticulously restored by a private Egyptian company. The restoration preserved the ship’s historic character while introducing modern comforts suited to luxury travel.

In 2006, the iconic SS Misr returned to the Nile—reborn as a five-star heritage cruise ship offering guests an exceptional journey that combines timeless history with contemporary sophistication.
